

8. AIRCRAFT INTERIOR CLEANING

When an aircraft commences a flight, boarding passengers should see an attractive and immaculate cabin interior (Fig. 32). During flight conditions deteriorate, and therefore at each transit stop, or during quick turn-rounds at terminal airports, rapid tidying is necessary. Usually time will not permit a complete cleaning operation; nor is this possible when passengers remain on board. The extent of cleaning will be dependent on the amount of time available; at all events priority must be given to the removal of litter and dry waste and the cleaning of toilet compartments and galleys.
